before the explosion."
Back at the office a message from Joyce Masters marked "very urgent" was waiting. Sheriff Robinson didn't recognize the phone number as he dialed.

"Joyce, Craig here, what's up?"

"Oh, Craig, this Promise Road thing goes deeper than we thought and higher than you can imagine."

"What have you got?"

"After I faxed you those photos and stuff I was called in to my superior's office. He was pretty hot. Now all traces of information concerning Promise Road, the Omaha bombing and the FBI list of known fugitives are gone. Our office computer files are wiped clean."

"Gone, Joyce?"

"Yes, Craig, but there's more, much more."

as they hadn't been able to get a trace on her location. And the list of questions running through his head was endless: Why and who had wiped out the computer files? Where was Dr. Petrofske? Was his disappearance linked to that woman who'd been hit head on in Elgin, tied to the Jamie Jordan murder? How did those 10 very dusty coffins get into the barn after Sue cleaned it the Friday before? Who was the Countess Atlaske? Where was Brandy Jo?
Why was she spending so much secretive time with Masters, and now where was she?
"This all started after that Cleaver guy was killed in Summerline," Robinson thought to himself. He rounded the corner and made the turn off the main road to the secluded spot he and Wayne had decided upon. "Maybe Masters will have some answers."
